The MARYLAND MILITARY CHALLENGE AWARD TOKENS

By; Paul Belschner R-394

The Uniformed Services University of the Health Services 1972 also Known by its acronym of: USUHS. The USUHS is a medical school for the United States military forces and uniformed members of the U.S. Public Health Services. It is located on the grounds of the National Naval Medical Center, which has recently been re-named "Walter Reed Medical Center" at 8901 Wisconsin Avenue, Bethesda, Maryland.

This Token is a recent ebay purchase (99 cents) and fits in with my Maryland and military token collections. As an employee of VERIZON this Complex was part of my work area from the late 1960's until retirement in 2008. I was not aware that this token existed as I had never seen one .

With a little knowledge and luck you can find some nice tokens at reasonable prices on ebay.

Their motto translates to: "Good Medicine in Bad Places"

BALTIMORE'S PACKING INDUSTRY

PART 3 by Jane Sears MD TAMS LM12

This series is about the men who made up Baltimore's Packing Industry. These reviews are about the many companies that engaged in the Packing Industry in Baltimore during the 1880's. Extracts from many old books printed over one hundred years ago (called Vanity books) will appear. Printed word for word as in the books including the artwork. There may be more than one biography for a company. These biographies will give an idea of who these men were, and the details about their company. Just remember when you read these articles; the original publication was talking in present tense, 130 years ago.

(Question: What is a Vanity book? - - - - - Answer: Years ago, a person who wanted to appear important in the community would pay to be included in a book about leading citizens).

(Note: Before the address changes in 1886, what is shown here isn't valid because of the new number.)

1781, and their son, James Mallory, was born March 26, 1782. The family is of English origin, and has ever displayed, in the successive generations, those strong and dominant qualities, which have given to the Anglo-Saxon the ruling position, which he holds in every quarter of the globe.

Willard Mallory, son of James Mallory, and father of Dwight Davidson Mallory, was born in Connecticut, and remained until past middle life in his native city, New Haven, where he successfully engaged in the oyster business. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Jeremiah and Susan (Andrews) Davidson, of East Haven, Connecticut, and they were the parents of two sons: Dwight Davidson, mention below; and Jeremiah D., a sketch of whom appears elsewhere. Willard Mallory died in September 1876, in Baltimore, where he had resided for some years, winning the reputation of an able businessman and a good citizen.

Dwight Davidson Mallory, son of Willard and Elizabeth (Davidson) Mallory, was born April 10, 1837, in New Haven, Connecticut, and was educated in private schools in his native city. Knowing that he was then enjoying what would probably be his only opportunity for study, and that the time was necessarily limited, he devoted himself sedulously to the acquisition of such knowledge as he had facilities for acquiring, thus early displaying the foresight and tenacity of purpose, which marked his subsequent career. In 1854 he engaged in the grocery business on his own account, continuing the enterprise until 1856, when he moved to Detroit, Michigan, where he became a pioneer in the oyster trade, an industry which at that time was scarcely known in that city. The attempt to introduce it would, no doubt, have been very successful, had it not been that the length of time required for the transportation of the oysters caused them to spoil before reaching their destination. In 1862, therefore, he removed the headquarters of the industry to Baltimore, founding the firm of D. D. Mallory & Company.

Yours Truly

D. D. Mallory

Here they built up the enormous oyster and fruit packing business with which their name has ever been indissolubly connected. Their first place of business was on Aliceanna Street, but finding the situation poorly adapted to their rapidly increasing trade, they moved, after a short time, to Gardiner's shipyard, at the foot of Washington Street, where they put up the buildings and wharf which still remain. The firm gave constant employment to several hundred persons, packing immense quantities of oysters and fruit, the number of bushels, daily dispatched, during the busy season being reckoned by the thousand. They established branch houses in Detroit, Chicago and Pittsburgh, the trade extending to all parts of the United States and frequent shipments being made to foreign countries. For twenty years, Mr. Mallory was at the head of one of the largest establishments of the kind on this continent, his reputation for business integrity and financial stability keeping pace with his material prosperity. Owing to the fact that he was the heart and soul of the enterprise, not merely presiding over and directing its transactions but attending to all the details, his health failed, forcing him, in 1882, to sell the business, which he might also be said to have created. Reared on the sure foundation which he laid for it, and strengthened by the many years during which it was guided and enlarged by his far sighted wisdom and enterprising yet conservative spirit, it stands today, a memorial to its founder and a far sighted wisdom and enterprising yet conservative spirit, its stands today, a memorial to its founder and a far reaching power in the business world.

Mr. Mallory is a director of the National Mechanics' Bank and the Hopkins Place Savings Bank. He has frequently been solicited to become a candidate for public office, but has invariably declined. He has always been a liberal supporter of the various charitable and benevolent institutions been a liberal supporter of the various charitable and benevolent institutions and enterprises of this adopted city, giving to several of them his time and personal attention as well as pecuniary aid. He is a directory in the Friendly Inn, the Boys' Home and the Women's Hospital. He belongs to the Charity Lodge of Masons, of Detroit, Michigan, and is a member of the Merchants' Club. In the sphere of politics, he affiliates with the Republican Party. He is a member and trustee of Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Mr. Mallory married, August 12, 1860, Elizabeth, daughter of James and Eliza (Ames) Spencer, of Middletown, Connecticut, the former a native of England. Mr. Mallory is a man of very strong domestic traits and affections. No other spot has for him the attractions, which his own fireside possesses, and he finds in his beautiful home on Eutaw Place the most perfect happiness which it is ever his lot to enjoy. This house was built by Mr. Mallory on his retirement from business and is one of the handsomest and most attractive residences in the city.

Although now so long withdrawn from the arena of business, Mr. Mallory's name is a familiar one in all parts of the United States; his phenomenal success has given him a national reputation. Baltimore, however, is the center of the great systems of commercial enterprise, which owes it origin to him, and she claims him as one of the worthiest of her adopted sons. He is a typical representative of his stalwart race, transplanted to a more genial soil into which his being has struck deep and enduring root. New Haven was his birthplace, but Baltimore is his home.

city of the world. In reviewing the various business houses of Baltimore which are extensively engaged in this important industry, the writer was particularly attracted by that of O. W. Miller & Co., located at No. 242 South Wolfe Street, as being one especially worthy of mention in this industrial volume. The business was established fifteen years ago, and it has grown upon its own merits to huge proportions. A part of the building is the building is 40 x 400 feet in dimensions. A noticeable feature to every department throughout the whole building is the thorough neatness and cleanliness that prevails. From two hundred to four hundred hands, and a time even more are employed, which will give the reader some idea of the extent of the productions of this establishment. The goods produced here are known as the "Triangle" brand, and they are extensively used and highly prized for their delicate flavor throughout this and foreign countries. O. W. Miller and G. Bunnell are the gentlemen comprising the firm. This firm have a large fleet of their own vessels.

Moore & Brady, Oyster and Fruit Packers, Foot of Montgomery Street

Mr. Brady came to Baltimore, and, after acting as traveling salesman for an oyster-packing firm for a short time, he soon made a reputation as being one of the brightest salesman in the line. It seems as though fate destined these two meant to come together, which they did, as above stated, in 1875. Like all other firms conducting extensive enterprises, they had a varied experience, but we are glad to say that the majority of them have been pleasant ones. Year by year the house has grown in reputation for the excellent quality of the goods they pack and the strict integrity of their dealings, until to-day, after twenty years' existence as a firm, none stands higher in the confidence of the public.

They were the first and for some years, the only firm that anticipated the practicability of packing oysters outside of the State of Maryland, and their foresight and acumen richly rewarded them.

Both members of the firm are married and have interesting families. Mr. Moore is the owner of one of the most elegant residences in Baltimore, situated at No. 1806 Eutaw Place. Mr. Brady is located in a commodious and elegantly furnished home on East Baltimore Street, near Patterson Park.

Within the past six months up additional warehouses and workshops, placing in new and improved machinery, extensive plant, putting up additional warehouses and workshops, placing in new and improved machinery, and one of the most commodious and beautiful offices to be found in the city, so that today the ground covered with their buildings (containing the very latest improved machinery, together with their immense pier, running a long distance out into the water) makes their factory plant one of the most complete in the world for the packing of oysters, fruits, and vegetables.

BEHOLD TH E OYSTER

BY: Richard Kaminski (with permission)

Jane Sears, MD.TAMS L M 12, in Maryland Tams Journals, Summer and Fall 2013,listed a total of 31 canning and produce businesses in Baltimore.

The major ingredient in the canning operations was the Chesapeake Bay oyster. In an article by Alexis Blair appearing in the publication "Voice" a little additional information about the oyster was documented and is reproduced for your educational enjoyment .

A Celebration OF BALTIMORE'S FAVORITE BIVALVE

By Alexis Blair

Many outside of the state of Maryland associate her solely with crabs – whether steamed or formed into a cake. Free State natives, however, know that the crab is in good company with Baltimore's favorite bivalve, the oyster.

Long before Natty Boh and Old Bay, Baltimore was synonymous with oysters. Indeed, one translation of the word Chesapeake from the Algonquian language is "Great Shellfish Bay." In 1701, upon visiting the region, Francis Louis Michel wrote, "The abundance of oysters here is incredible. There are whole banks of them so that the ships must avoid them. . . . They surpass those in England by far in size; indeed, they are four times as large. I often cut them in two, before I could put them into my mouth."

To give you an idea of just how many millions of oysters we are talking about, picture this: oysters filter water as they feed, which increases water clarity. At their historical peak oysters were filtering all of the Chesapeake Bay's water in less than one week (it takes an entire year for the current population to do so).

Now, fast forward a few hundred years. Oysters are a dietary staple to a much larger human population and in high demand. The introduction of dredging, canning and improved shipping methods in the mid-1800s has made it possible to pack and ship our bay's bounty on a grand scale. With more than one hundred oyster-packing establishments operating in the city by 1870, Baltimore became the commercial canning center of the country. Over the next decade, local watermen would harvest tens of millions of bushels of oysters each year. This golden age of the Chesapeake Bay oyster would mean both economic boom and environmental plummet, all further solidifying oysters into the Baltimore psyche.

It is in tribute to this rich legacy that for one week each October, Baltimore's historic Federal Hill neighborhood transforms into the oyster lover's paradise known as Oysterfest! Now in its seventh year, this seafood-centric celebration,

Baltimore Exonumia Quiz #5

By: Russ Sears

1. Baltimore brewer Frederick Bauernschmit owned the American Brewery. Where was it located?

2. Who was Fred Bauernschmidt's father and what does he have to do with Baltimore exonumia?

3. The early National Brewing Company token says it was founded in 1885. Where in Baltimore County was it located?

4. National Brewing Company advertising including at least one token sometimes featured a one eye man. What was his name?

5. George Brehm's brewery was located in what neighborhood and what raised him to the position of owner of his own brewery?

6. George Brehm owned what park?

7. The Baltimore Coin Club celebrated its 50th anniversary in what year?

8. George Brehm tokens fall into what desirable category for collectors?

9. In the late 1890's and early 1900's, what did you get with a nickel beer?

10. What token user's token say "one white".

Answers to Baltimore Exonumia Quiz #5

1. Everyone knows that the American Brewery was located on Gay Street in the recently rehabilitated building. While that is true, the American Brewery building on Gay street was originally the J. F.Wiessner & Sons Brewing Company building. It didn't become the American Brewery until after Prohibition.
Fred Bauernschmidt operated prior to Prohibition in Old Town where the fire station is currently located.

2. Fred's dad was George Bauernschmidt, the largest brewer in Baltimore prior to the sale of his company to the Maryland Brewing Company in the late 1890's. George issued a rare token during the Civil War around the time of the founding of his original brewery in 1864. He also issued tokens for the Gay Street Greenwood Park when he owned it. During most of the life of his brewery, he was located on Bel Air Avenue (Gay Street), Oliver Street and Chester Street.

3. The National Brewing Company was located in Highlandtown, east part of Canton. The company is not there anymore but the building still exists, having been rehabbed several years ago. At the time of the founding of the company, its location was in Baltimore County. Changing of the east boundary of the city in 1918 put it in Baltimore City.

4. National Brewing Company, commonly called "Natty Boh" featured Mr. Boh in its advertisement. It also had Mr. Pilsner and Chester Peake, but nothing approached the popularity of Mr. Boh.

5. The Brehm Brewery was located on Brehms Lane in the Belair Edison neighborhood, just off Bel Air Road. Mr. Brehm's wife owned the brewery after her first husband died. That made it his brewery.

6. Brehm owned Prospect Park on Eastern Avenue. Its present location would be in the area between the sewage plant and where the I695 crosses Eastern Avenue.
In the late 1800's and early 1900's, people would leave the summer heat in Baltimore City for the cooler temperatures of Baltimore County. There were numerous shore parks along Eastern Avenue, some of which had tokens. But Prospect Park had racing and amusements as well as the beer. There are several tokens from Prospect Park.

7. Founded in 1935, the Baltimore Coin Club celebrated its 50th anniversary in 1985. Medals were made to commemorate the event. The year 1985 also saw Baltimore hosting the American Numismatic Association annual convention, the first held in Baltimore since 1916.

8. Artifacts from Breweries fall into the collecting area of Brewiana. People who collect Brewiana are often competitors of ours for tokens and medals of Brewers, but they don't usually care about other tokens we care about.

9. Free lunch with a nickel beer. And it was quite a spread.

10. "One White" was on the token of Morris Pringsheim. The White was Berlin White Beer. This token has the possibility of being a Civil War token, but is not classified that way because it cannot be proven that they operated only during the Civil War.

JOHN C. ROTH / THE FAYETTE

By Jane Sears LM12

The Fayette Café / Restaurant was located at 28–30 East Fayette Street, on the northwest corner of St. Paul and Fayette Streets, opposite the Courthouse. I refer to The Fayette as a Café / Restaurant because newspaper articles and Baltimore City directories list it that way, not as a bar.

John C. Roth opened The Fayette in 1886. Citizens sought out his prized Salisbury Punch. (I think it was some kind of alcohol beverage). John was the first to introduce the horseshoe bar in the city of Baltimore. Customers enjoyed the free gentleman lunch The Fayette offered which consisted of hot corn beef sandwiches. With free food, Roth had to make a profit on the beverages he served. The horseshoe bar served customers on the outside and the bartenders dressed in uniforms waited on them from the inside of the bar. It was popular with politicians. Democrats seated on the right and Republicans on the left. Two of the famous customers who patronized the bar, were George Cohan and H. L. Mencken.

As the Great Baltimore Fire swept through Baltimore on February 7 & 8, 1904, it engulfed The Fayette. As the smoke cleared and the owners were allowed to re-enter the Burnt District, John Roth saw his famed café / restaurant in ashes. He took his losses and started rebuilding. The Fayette was reopened on Wednesday, January 24, 1906. Many of his customers flocked to the opening with good wishes. Other businesses destroyed in the fire took 2-3 years for the rebuilding of the ruin city.

The Fayette Café and Restaurant closed in June 1921. Roth retired and sold the property to a brokerage firm. An article in the June 29, 1921 Sun paper saluted the passing of a famous old downtown bar room. John C. Roth operated The Fayette for 35 years. In 1922 he started a saloon business at 1437 Reynolds Street.

John Christian Roth was born in Baltimore on 29 May 1860. His German parents were George Michael Roth and Catherine Gesswein Roth. George was a saloon keeper who owned a tavern on the south side of Thames Street. John married Anna Eleanora Hackett in Baltimore in 1885. They had one daughter (Margaretta C. Roth). John C. Roth died on July 1, 1932 at the age of 72. He was a member of the German Society of Maryland, Knights Templar, Benevolent Protective Order of Elks- Lodge No. 7, Joppa Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and Boumi Temple. He was buried at Loudon Park Cemetery.
